Rally ends, black men go home with vigor

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Black men, energized by the huge rally in the nation's capital, began spreading the spirit Tuesday by making plans to clean up inner-city neighborhoods back home, register voters and simply help each other survive.

As Washington got back to normal, both black and white members of Congress urged President Clinton to create a commission to study America's racial divisions.

Organizers of the "Million Man March" celebrated their success and accused the government of a racist undercount — the 400,000 estimated by the U.S. Park Service.

After Monday's long day of prayer, songs and speeches, ma; y men traveled all night by bus, car or train to return home in time for work Tuesday.

"I hope it reverberates around the country in energizing people right where they are," said Joseph E. Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Alvertis Simmons of Denver promised to encourage black fathers to pay the child support they owe.

"Brothers, make this commitment," he said. "If you know a brother who is not paying child support, cut him off because he should be taking care of his kids Several members of Congress sent Clinton a letter urging him to appoint a commission on race relations "to issue a report on the progress and failures that our nation has made on race since 1968."

That was the year the Kerner Commission issued its famous study that concluded that "our nation is moving toward two societies, one black, one white - separate and unequal.'

At a news conference, Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan and other march organizers said they would sue the U.S. Park Service over its incorrect crowd estimate.

There were more than 1 million people spread across the Mall, Farrakhan insisted.

During a wide-ranging 2 1/2-hour speech that ended the rally, Farrakhan exhorted the men to improve themselves, take care of their families, rebuild their communities, invest in black-owned businesses and attend a church or BYU President Rex E. Lee has. accomplished what the church expects from each member: possession of the virtues listed in the 13th Article of Faith, said President Gordon B. Hinckley at Tuesday's Devotional.

Students and faculty filled the 22,700-seat Marriott Center, and hundreds more lined the hallway to hear President Hinckley, the first prophet to speak at BYU since President Ezra Taft Benson came in October 1987.

Pres. Hinckley's speech focused on staying faithful to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and meeting the expectations the church has for its members.

"Keep faith with the church," he said. "It is true. It is divine. It is the only power under the heavens which, reaches beyond the veil of death. It is: eternal and everlasting in its consequences."

Pres. Hinckley said the church has expectations of its members that are found in the 13th Article of Faith and include being honest, true, chaste, virtuous, serving others and working.

Simple honesty is ... the very essence of integrity. It demands that we be straightforward, unequivocal, in walking the straight and narrow line of what is right and true," Pres. Hinckley said.

To this description, Pres. Hinckley added, "Better a poor grade than a dishonest act."

Pres. Hinckley called pornography destructive to chastity and virtue: "Avoid the corrosive, destructive forces of iniquity found in pornography. Pornography is the literature of the devil. Shun it ... (It) is a vicious brew of slime and sleaze, the partaking of which only leads to misery, degradation, and regret.'

Pres. Hinckley said while studying is important, "in a sense it is a selfish

Pres. Hinckley mentioned many of Pres. Lee's achievements and thanked him for the service he has given during his six years as BYU's president. Pres. Lee will resign at the end of this

Bomb explosion injures 29 on French train

PARIS — A bomb exploded under a seat on a commuter train during morning rush hour Tuesday, blowing off some passengers' feet in the eighth bombing or attempted bombing in France since July. At least 29 people were injured.

The bomb was a gas canister loaded with hex nuts. Police consider that type of device to be the trademark of Algerian militants opposed to France's support of the military-installed government in Algiers.

Shortly after the underground train pulled out of the Musee d'Orsay station, "there was a huge explosion," a passenger told France 2 television. "The train stopped and the engineer told us 'Don't move!' At that point we were engulfed in smoke. After a few seconds we heard the first cries from the injured.' The silver train car was ripped open. Seared orange vinyl seats were scattered about, and twisted steel was heaped all around. France has been hit by a wave of bombings since a bomb exploded in a packed subway car at the same St. Michel station July 25, killing seven people and wounding 84. Today's bombing raised the injury toll to at least 155.

Air bag implicated in 5-year-old boy's death

SALT LAKE CITY — An autopsy implicated an air bag in the death of a 5year-old boy who broke his neck when his grandmother's car bumped into a concrete planter box in a parking lot.

The dual air bags inflated in the Oct. 10 accident, twisted Jordan West's head, said Val Wilson, North Salt Lake police chief. Wilson quoted medical examiners as saying "the air bag definitely had a cause in the death."

Ed Lechtzin, spokesman for General Motors Corp. said, "Because we haven't had a chance to investigate the case or the car, it would be inappropriate to comment on it.

Lynn Oliver, the grandmother, said she and the boy were wearing seat belts. Dr. Jeffrey Augenstein, a Miami trauma surgeon who is studying auto accidents; said the only known cases in which an air-bag deployment led to a death were when the victim was not wearing a seat belt.

Paper girl chased by gun-toting truck owner

SALT LAKE CITY — A 10-year-old girl delivering newspapers was chased by an armed man who thought his truck was being robbed, police said.

The man told police he was looking out the window of his apartment at about 5:30, a.m. Monday when he saw the girl near his truck.

Believing the girl was a burglar, the resident chased her, ordered her to stop and allegedly waved a handgun at her, said Salt Lake County Sheriff's Deputy

Bill Haskins. The terrified girl, Alexandria Martin, ran across the parking lot and climbed into her mother's car. Blocked by a fence, the woman drove across a lawn and

"took out a couple of light poles" in fleeing the complex. The case likely will be reviewed by prosecutors to determine if charges should be filed, Haskins said.

Trash trading boosts recycling standards

CHICAGO — Forget junk bonds. Now they're trading junk.

A national marketplace for buying and selling recyclable trash opened Tuesday at the Chicago Board of Trade. The first transaction: Weyerhaeuser Co. bought 100 tons of old newspapers from Oswego County, N.Y.

The venture promises to boost recycling by setting quality standards and publicizing prices for used paper, glass and plastics. It can help small towns with curbside collection programs find big buyers of reusable materials.

"This is the biggest shot in the arm for recycling in this country since municipal recycling efforts began in the 1970s," said Mark Lichtenstein, Oswego County's trash manager and president of the National Recycling Coalition, which includes both buyers and sellers of recyclables. Eventually, the Board of Trade may launch futures and options contracts for recyclables, turning old beer bottles and milk jugs into investment vehicles. Currently, big companies buy most of their recyclable materials from brokers and commercial trash collectors with whom they have contracts. But small local governments are often at the mercy of local dealers because they lack knowledge of the value of their materials elsewhere seen a significant increase in the number of patient referrals from bishops as compared to that of 20 years ago. The primary reason for the increase is the spread of public awareness, she

BYU swimming coach Timothy Powers, former bishop of the BYU 172nd married ward said the challenges he saw with domestic violence were minimal, although he is aware of other bishops who have seen problems among BYU married students.

"By and large the couples here are the cream-of-the-crop," he said. "The majority have recently married in the temple and hold temple recommends."

Powers said a bishop will usually become aware of abuse problems through another individual — such as a neighbor, friend, victim or abuser. The bishop becomes the mediator for the couple as they talk it out, he said.

The bishop can help a couple determine appropriate behavior in marriage and then refer them to professional help when needed. Powers mentioned LDS Social Services and the BYU Counseling and Development Center.

Depending upon the extent and nature of abuse, a disciplinary council may be called, he said.

According to Powers, couples who do the little things, such as reading the scriptures, praying together, attending church meetings and daily expressing their love to one another, should have no problem with abuse in their marriage.

"The best marriage counselor is the scriptures," Powers said.

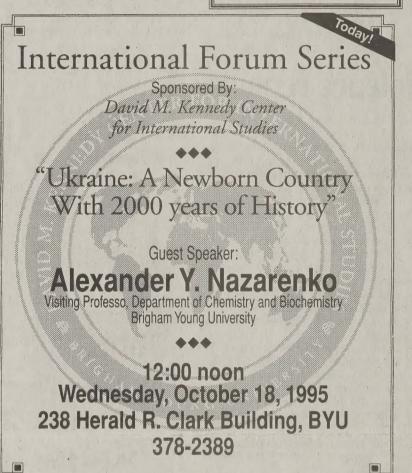

Powers counsels victims of abuse to first approach their spouse about the problem and then go to their local leader for further help. The gospel of Jesus Christ does not condone abuse in any form, he said.

Inappropriate behavior is often symptomatic of something else, Powers said, and sometimes abuse stems from past situations in the abuser's home.

For the abuser, Powers said, there is a way back. It is a process in which the offender must first "own the sin" and take responsibility for past

There is no justification, he said. The bishop's role is to call this person to repentance and then to help that

Alumni help students plan career paths

By HEATHER JACOBSON Universe Staff Writer

Students can talk with professionals in their chosen careers free-of-charge during the 12th Annual Career Connections; sponsored by the Student Alumni Association as part of Homecoming Week.

Career Connections will bring alumni from across the country into one room for one-on-one interviews with students Oct. 27 from 8 a.m. to noon in the Wilkinson Center Memorial Lounge.

Here, students can gain valuable knowledge to guide them in their future studies and career plans, said Ida Smith, Alumni Activities Administrator.

To have professionals give this kind of service represents thousands of dollars of time and knowledge that alumni voluntarily give, Smith said.

"Although these 15-minute interview sessions are not employmentseeking interviews," Smith said, "they have proven to be serendipitous experiences that have opened doors for many students as they start the jobseeking process.

of Span Construction and Engineering Inc.; Dr. Barbara Hurst, president and founder of Millcreek Women's Center; Merrill Jenson, composer for IMAX films and movies; Jane Clayson, KSL news anchor; and Gregory Newell, former U.S. ambassador and president of the International Commerce Development

To participate in Career Connections, students must sign up between now and Oct. 25 at the Alumni House, which is north of the Tanner Building.

Spaces are limited, so students should sign up early.

Abuse victims need help, but we ignore the signs ritually no crime is more damnable than the abuse of women and children, and in the aftermath of the O.J. Simpson trial, Nicole Brown Simpson has continued to testify of the brutality she suffered before her brutal murder. Diary excerpts were released to the news media this week by an unknown source "concerned about battered women's issues." Nicole's father, Louis Brown, has verified the handwriting was penned by his daughter, according to the Associated Press.

Just nine days before she was killed, Nicole wrote in her diary that O.J. had threatened her, saying, "You hung up on me last night, you're gonna pay for this." A 1988 entry, written when Nicole was two months pregnant with their son Justin, said O.J. called her a "fat pig," demanded she get an abortion and drove her out of the house at gunpoint.

More signs that Nicole suffered horrible abuse and was frightened by her ex-husband's tirades were found in her safe-deposit box after her death. She left photos of her bruised face, O.J.'s apology and a will naming her sister, Dominique, as guardian of her children, according to Newsweek magazine.

After his acquittal, Simpson said he was willing to meet with battered women to discuss the problems of domestic violence. To their credit, the National Organization for Women told him one batterer in those women's lives was more than enough without him adding to their grief. Simpson acknowledges he abused his ex-wife, but maintains he is innocent of murdering her. Although a jury acquitted him, his case points to the larger problem: the batterer's cycle of abuse all too often ends with murder or an extremely violent incident. These batterers do not just cure themselves, but some mental health professionals believe abusers can be turned around if legal action is swift and severe.

Learning of Nicole's abuse shocked many Americans who believed domestic violence does not reach upper-class homes. While it is no excuse for a methodical double murder, Lyle and Eric Menendez claim their parents sexually and physically abused them in their posh California home. These incidents show how domestic violence cuts across social and economic barriers. It inflicts horrible emotional and physical damage that almost defies understanding. About 1.8 million women are abused every year — one every 16 seconds, according to Murray Strauss, co-director of the University of New Hampshire Family Research Lab, quoted in Newsweek

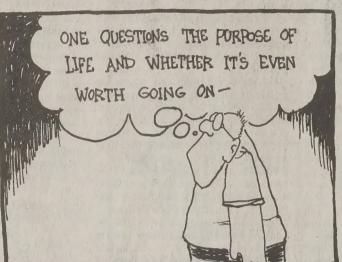

Although domestic violence issues have been repeatedly addressed by news media, the rate of women who die at the hands of their abusive husbands, ex-husbands or boyfriends is higher than in nearly two decades, according to Newsweek. These deaths often come as no surprise to people close to the victims. Women may try to hide the abuse they are suffering, but as the cycle of violence spins out of control, they are less apt to fool friends and family members. Yet the abuse often goes unreported until it is too late.

Domestic violence legislation has been toughened in the last five years as more attention is focused on the vicious nature of these crimes. However, people often fail to report telltale signs of abuse. Thoughts such as "It's her problem, let her report it," or "She can leave him whenever she wants to," are based on ignorance and insensitivity. The horror these women and their children suffer cannot be understood by applying reason or logic. There is simply nothing logical or reasonable about a man punching or kicking a helpless woman or defenseless child. Domestic violence is everyone's problem. If people know abuse is occurring and fail to report it, they are no better than an accomplice to the abuser.

We need to not only create awareness of the cycle of domestic violence, but to be willing to report suspected abuse quickly to the proper authorities. Discussing the problem will not make it go away, nor will ignoring it. Only when we care enough to become involved can we soothe the pain of abuse victims.

If I had a nickel instead of your advice...

Advice. Everyone has it and everyone is more than willing to offer it to you, especially if you are a reporter. In the 10 months that I have worked at The Daily Universe I have been given enough "helpful" advice from family, friends and associates to put an entire paper out myself. It is funny how people that have never had any journalistic training suddenly become resident experts on the way to report and write as well as the way to run a paper when a family member or friend becomes a staff member.

It is not unusual for old friends to call me up out of the blue, people I haven't spoken to in months, to offer me advice on my columns or to give me a "hot tip." I have gotten really good at sounding excited and pretending like I plan to write a story uncovering and exposing the blatant injustice of the situation. "Oh, don't think I'm not going to write a story about this," I often say with feigned anger and agitation. My roommates have heard me say it so many times that all they can do is laugh at me.

A classic example was the time a good friend of mine called me up at 1 a.m. to tell me that her boyfriend's stereo was stolen out of his unlocked car and I needed to write a story on it. I was baffled. Was I supposed to write a story on the theft or his utter stupidity? In my mind that $600 stereo, located in an unlocked and unattended car, was just screaming "steal me" and so the theft was anything but newsworthy. However, at 1 a.m. my response was "Wow, that is just awful, I'll have to look into it."

Another friend comes running into my apartment one night, out of breath and visibly shaken, looking like she had just been attacked. It turned out that she looked so tousled because she had run all the way from campus to tell me what she had just witnessed. While taking a test in the testing center she had seen a young man cheat on his exam. She was just disgusted and it was my job, as a reporter for the campus paper, to do something about it. Again I tried to decide what my story angle should be. At first I thought I might do a story about naive students and their experiences with the real world. But then I decided that what I really ded to do was write a story informing the University that the Universe was now expected to take the place of the Honor Code Council. In the end I chose to settle her worries by saying, "Are you serious the testing center? I am going to have check this one out."

My younger brother, who is well awar my plight as a journalist, loves to mock One day he sent me an email labeled story tip." Contained in the email was si information his roommate passed on to when he discovered I wrote for Universe. "You really need to look this," he wrote. "My roommate informed last night that he has it on good author that the Pope has signed a pact with Devil." Now that would certainly be no worthy if I wrote for the National Enquinometer. Strictly restricted by the journitic integrity which governs the Universe was forced to disregard this story identification.

It is amazing the things that you can cover when you tap the valuable resou that surround you. And if you are relucky, like I seem to be, you don't even it to work at it, the resources will come to spewing information.

Of course, in all fairness, and in the instances of still having some friends left when the column runs, I have to admit that I have to ten some valuable tips and advice friends and family members. I can home asy, however, that for the most part friends and their advice don't mix easily with the career as a journalist.

My way or the highway

To the Editor:

As reported in the Oct. 17 Daily Universe, the city of Provo plans an $11 million highway project to connect routes 189 and 89 in south Provo. This seems to be a good idea; an improved infrastructure would especially help the businesses in that area continue to grow and develop.

Unfortunately, one million expected federal dollars are still lacking, reportedly because our representative in Congress had a run-in with the chair of the Transportation Committee. This is not good; maybe Rep. Orton doesn't play nicely and get along with powerful Republicans, or maybe the line-item veto only applies to appropriations bills from Democrats. Maybe it's another matter. That's not my point

The more important lesson from this teaches us about our mayor's priorities. Mayor Stewart went all the way to Washington to schmooze friendly Republicans for the $1 million. Even if that concerted effort doesn't work, our dogged mayor assures us the job will get funded: "It's that big a priority to me and to the city."

That is, especially compared to concerns like affordable student housing, residential streets and the Food and Shelter Coalition.

Pell Grants aid students in helping themselves

To the Editor

I just wanted to respond to an article printed in the Sept. 27 paper on the ethics of Pell Grants. The article was very one-sided. All the justifications were for the opposing side, except some silly comments (of course, without any justification) from some bishop saying, "I think it's OK." It was a very poorly written article, and the young man who was quoted throughout, saying such things as, "It's against my religion and political beliefs ... "failed to mention several important items.

First of all, he quoted a talk by Pres. Benson when he said students should not be receiving food stamps, and if they need money that bad they should withdraw for a semester and work. Now, he being the prophet (or an apostle in that instance), he is undoubtedly correct. But, there are some major differences between "food stamps" and a Pell Grant. With food stamps there is this idea that it is something for nothing, which is true. "For he that is idle shall not eat the bread nor wear the garments of the laborer." (D&C 42:42). It is wrong to receive something for nothing—the prophets have said it.

Have you asked a Pell-Grant recipient recently what he or she must do to receive that grant? You must be a full-time student to receive the full grant. Now, I don't know about you, but my classes are quite a labor. In fact, according to statistics we are all familiar with, by going to school we are dramatically increasing our future wages. How few of our youth apply themselves enough to go to school? We're right here in the middle of 32,000, but what percentage of young people go to school after high school? How many start taking drugs, being immoral and becoming dependent on welfare? "Wherefore ... take heed ... that ye do not judge that which is evil to be of God, or that which is good and of God to be of the devil." School is work. Such 'something for nothing" type handouts as food stamps, should be avoided. If someone needs money that bad they should withdraw and work for a time. But there are many of us who are not that bad off but still need help. A Pell Grant is just that sort of help.

Next, what does a Pell Grant motivate its recipient to do? Well, you can only receive one as a student and you can only receive enough to really help as a full-time student. On the other hand, what is a food-stamp recipient motivated to do? Money is received whether or not you attend school. Heck, with that money and more time you could have more fun, so why not cut back a few classes here and there? Hey, why not just drop classes all together? It's easy to see the trend. The Lord gave us wise counsel when he told us not to take things, on a regular basis, without laboring for that which we receive. This makes us lazy and unproductive. That's another reason why Pell Grants are so useful. Only by laboring intensely at your studies can you

It should also be noted that divisions due to riches and chances for learning were a major cause of the crumbling of the church in Nephite times. Should it be so today also that only the rich and children of the rich should be allowed to receive an education? "And the people began to be distinguished by ranks, according to their riches and their chances for learning; yea, some were ignorant because of their poverty, and others did receive great learning because of their riches." (3 Nephi

Is it then, likewise, unethical and religiously and politically incorrect to receive support from one's rich parents? That's something for nothing. Or is it? Are the parents supporting their child's laziness or his desire to learn? Does a Pell Grant support one's laziness or one's desire to learn?

Going back many generations we can find an insightful story. What would have happened if Joseph had refused the wise men's generous gift? Would the trip to Egypt have been possible without that help? We can only speculate. But, if Joseph had turned down the gifts, would he have done so because it was wrong or because he was proud? That's all I have to say about that.

Thank you very much and I truly hope this could help people who may have been confused by the article's one-sidedness. Thanks for all you do there at The Daily Universe and keep up the good work.

To the Editor:

I have begun my fourth year here at BYU. I have thoroughly enjoyed the time I've spent in Provo and here at this wonderful university. But, to tell you the truth, I am a bit confused on a few matters. This past summer my wife and I wanted to go and hit a few tennis balls around. It was our first time to be able to play on the newly constructed courts and we both were looking forward to it. As we pulled up to the courts we saw they were completely empty. We were delighted, knowing we could get on to play a bit. As we walked up to the courts we were greeted by a security officer and a BYU Physical Education employee. They explained to us that we had to have a BYU I.D. and BYU P.E. issue in order to play. We understood why one would need BYU I.D. to play on the new courts, but why would you also need issue? The BYU I.D. alone proves you are a student, doesn't it? They explained to us that we could go and play on the Helaman Halls Courts because they don't patrol them! We then left to play on the Helaman courts, not wanting to go and get BYU issue to play a little tennis. Remothere was not one person playing on the

As we pulled up to the Helaman count to our surprise, the courts were full, answas a waiting line to get on to play. The thing that came to mind was the warmoney those new tennis courts were. But our tongues and waited to play.

To our dismay, last Saturday a similal happened. It was a few hours before th ball game and we wanted to go and hit balls. Let's try to get on the new cour decided. As we pulled up, there were people playing on the courts, and they have BYU issue. We were excited to get to hit a few balls on the new cour noticed a few members of the tennis teal a lot of students having fun. We playe while and soon came another member P.E. Department kicking us off the court saying we needed both the BYU I.I BYU issue. I asked why, and he said not know. As we walked off the cou looked around and before he came ever was full, but by the time he left, then two courts being used. Amazing! We over to Helaman Halls hoping to ge play, but they were all full (not one was wearing BYU issue).

My question is this: does the BY prove I am a student? Why would one in wear BYU issue also? Football sidelights: Non-LDS athletes, Arizona St. bus trips

It intrigues me that so many non-LDS football players come to BYU. When I get the chance, I try to ask Says wide receiver Kaipo McGuire, It's the best passing school in the country. Good program. Classy program. Winning program.

McGuire, a junior from Pearl City, Hawaii, remembers watching the BYU vs. Hawaii game every year. Quarterbacks like Jim McMahon, Steve Young and Robbie Bosco lured him onto the Cougar bandwagon.

ROB COLEMAN Sports Editor

"I was a BYU fan growing up. ... I liked Notre Dame and BYU. (At recruitment time) BYU was there for me and I jumped on it. (On the recruiting visit) people didn't know I was a football player. They were just genuinely nice.

What else made BYU attractive? "The lifestyle. Staying out of trouble." When strong safety Jamie Cook told me he came to BYU because of the religious affiliation (as a transfer from Ricks College), I assumed he was LDS. I was wrong. Turns out he likes the disciplined structure.

In fact, BYU has a whole defensive backfield full of non-LDS players. Ylong with Cook, I've talked to Mermmell Reed, Eddie Sampson and Derick Bates about their choice of

Among other reasons, each athlete's decision had something to do with the strict standards that keep them (and the rest of us) out of trouble. Few other schools offer that.

Cornerbacks coach Brian Mitchell, who is also non-LDS, says the Honor Code often helps when recruiting.

All the kids I'm recruiting now are looking for a structured environment," Mitchell said. "I'm not just talking about average football players. I'm talking great athletes, blue chippers: the top 100 in Texas that can play anywhere in the U.S."

ATHLETIC SUPPORTERS: Were the blue-clad BYU fans, seated among the hordes at Sun Devil Stadium, noticeable on TV? If they weren't seen, they were heard.

My favorite moment: When Devil fans began chanting "A-S-U," it took no more than five seconds for Cougar tans to counter with "B-Y-U," effectively drowning them out.

The next day, The Arizona Republic newspaper read, "There were more boos than cheers from the crowd of 51,035, the largest of the year, when a 5.3-yard pass play from Steve Sarkisian to Mike Johnston was called back because of an illegal shift."

Of course, rumor has it there was a rather vociferous contingent of BYU students who, led by BYUSA President Wes McDougal, spent about 14 hours on a bus to attend the game.
BIG BRUISERS: Just when I thought, "Wow, these ASU fans are sure polite compared to those nasty, unruly WAC fans," this happened:

Some ASU students, apparently enraged by the "BYU Rules" sign on Wes McDougal's bus, began kicking

At the time, the bus' crew was at a tailgate party. But Elliott the bus driver, who chased the thugs off, said the "big bruisers" probably did about $1,000 worth of damage.

The hoodlums allegedly escaped into the stadium, where they put on striped uniforms and posed as football referees. ... Hey, that would explain a lot of things.

Hoops 'Madness' coming to BYU

By JASON ABHAU Universe Sports Writer

The crowd that had once been deafening now resembled a congregation during the invocation at sacrament meeting. It recognized the great importance of what was about to take place and held its breath in increasing anticipation.

As the student stood in the center of all this attention, he looked dazed. How could he comprehend the consequences of what he was about to do?

In the next few seconds, his life could change dramatically. As he was handed the ball, the mass of those gathered could almost feel the palms of his hands trickle with perspiration.

He carefully bounced the ball several times, glaring pensively at what he hoped would be its final destination. As he launched the ball into the heavens, the crowd rose to its feet.

When the ball swished through the net the multitude once again became deafening. He had just won $28,000.

This could be the scene Friday night in the Smith Fieldhouse, as BYU will hold its first annual Midnight Madness. Four lucky students, selected randomly from the crowd, will get the chance to win the following prizes: $15,000 shopping spree at the BYU Bookstore, $15,000 Signature Card credit, $15,000 cash and a $28,000 scholarship.

These contestants will be able to win these prizes by making shots from various points on the basketball

"For any BYU student who likes excitement, this is for them," said athletic marketing assistant Mike Deaver. 'We're going to set the benchmark for midnight madnesses around the coun-

As the tradition of the racquetball team grows on campus, Sawyer said, people come to know that the level of play is extremely high. This brings out only the highest level of players, she said.

Kevin Bower, a junior from Hartford, Wis., majoring in math education, feels he played his way on the team by keeping his mental composure and by playing an offensive, rather than a defensive, game. Racquetball is as much of a mental game as it is a physical game, Bower

Tryouts consisted of a skills test in which forehand shots, backhand shots, court positioning, and different types of serves were analyzed by Sawyer, assistant coach Roger Flick and players returning from last year's

After the skills test, the players competed against each other in a round-robin tournament. The winners of the tournament received invitations to play on the team.

Sawyer said this year's team has the talent to challenge for the national championship again.

Darla Wenger, a junior from Chambersburg, Pa., majoring in health education, said the combination of the talent coming in with the teaching skills of the coach should lead to a good team.

The Cougars play a number of tournaments during both fall and winter semesters in preparation for the regional tournament, which will be held in March at BYU. The national tournament will be in April.

Weber State had several game-point opportunities before it was finally able to put BYU away, 17-15.

Game two saw another partial come-back, this time from the Wildcats as they came back from a 13-3 lead to pull to 14-10 before BYU finished them off, 15-10.

Things got strange for the Cougars in game three. After they put up another 13-3 lead, Weber State went on a 12-1 run that gave them the lead and game point at 14-15.

The teams fought back and forth, exchanging side outs and taking away game points before BYU was finally able to pull off the 18-16 victory.

Game four saw the Cougars in their usual, settled form, as they beat the Leonard, museum director.

The exhibit was a coordinated project between LDS Public Affairs and Epicenter Communications, a publishing house in California.

Dr. Matthews Naythons, president of Epicenter Communications, said the idea originated through a "long series of coincidences."

Naythons, who is a physician, a publisher and a photojournalist, said the background for the idea began about six years ago when he was in Atlanta, working for "National Geographic."

At that time, he met Elder James O. Mason, now a member of the Second Quorum of the Seventy. "I thought that he was a really good guy," Naythons said of Elder Mason.

"I remembered that I liked him."

Then, two years later, Naythons said he was skiing in Utah and the man who drove him to the airport was

Naythons said he asked the taxi cab driver what he was doing in Utah when it was so cold and he could be in Samoa where it was

When the man answered that he was LDS and was doing some studies in Utah, Naythons said, "A light went off in my head."

He said he then thought, "Here's a global religion, not much is known about it ... (and)

I'm more interested in doing something (a project) that's not (about) another country.'

This thought then led to his writing a letter to Elder Mason, which led to a year-long project that took 42 photojournalists to 30 different countries, which led to an exhibit that has touched the hearts of many people.

"We have had a great outpouring of positive response." Leonard said. 'People are touched by the personal images. They see these real people in photographs that are creative.'

The photojournalists "took a look at what it means to be Latter-day Saints," Leonard said. 'Anything LDS people do from socially to religiously was part of the image captured by these photographers. It's a people-oriented exhibit.'

The photographs include images of Latter-day Saints doing service, preaching the gospel and performing ordinances, Leonard said. And the photographs suggest similarities among Latter-day Saints throughout the world, he added.

"Family prayer, family home evening, scripture study, service, blessings on the food — are all represented in various parts of the world and among various nationalities,"

Leonard said the church helped identify and open homes for the photojournalists who were involved in the

"We were looking for the perspective of outsiders guided by insiders," Navthons said.

The photographers basically lived with LDS families, staying the night in their homes and eating their meals, said Acey Harper, director of photography for the project.

'We were all over the place," Harper said. "We stayed in their (LDS) homes. We stayed with missionaries. Sometimes we would stay the night;

sometimes we'd stay eight or nine "It's unusual for people outside to be given this Harper was able to experience what it would be like to receive a mission call, enter the MTC and then go into the mission

"I perdirector of photography sonally accompanied a missionary when he got his calling and when he went to the MTC," Harper said.

"I got to go through the (MTC) door with him, while his parents went the other way. Harper said he stayed with the missionary for a few days in the MTC and then went with him to his mission in Thailand. "I was with him when he got his first companion," he said. "I met his mission president." Harper said the photojournalists involved with the project'enjoyed their experience.

"Without fail the photographers came back and said this was a great experience," he said. "(They said) that these were the nicest people that they had ever dealt with, that these were the friendliest people they had ever

Continuing he said, "It's unusual for people outside to be given this sort of access, and it's unusual for people to open their lives like this."

Epicenter Communications has published a book about the photojournalists' experience that contains 300 images. The exhibit has chosen 60 of those images to display in the museum, Leonard said.

Also available at the museum is a 13-minute, multi-image slide program that contains some images from the book, some from the exhibit and some that aren't in either one, Leonard

The book and the exhibit are both organized around three basic themes: family, missionary work and lifestyle: and President Gordon B. Hinckley has written the book's preface.

KEEP ON ROLLING: The Canon SoHome van travels across the country promoting its new home and small business products, and software. The van visited BYU Tuesday morning. The driver, David Dobbins, is excited about the chance he has to see the country.

Van driver sees U.S., promotes new software for homes, businesses

By BRAD LEONE Universe Staff Writer

The van rolls on.

From Boston last week to a onehour stop at BYU Tuesday morning, and then on to Salt Lake City, the Canon Computer SoHome van is making its rounds on a national level. And the van's driver is having the time of his life. Armed with a pager, some company credit cards and a stack of his favorite CDs, David Dobbins drives the specially equipped Chevrolet Astro from Hartford, Conn., to Los Angeles and in about everywhere in between. He is a large part of Canon's plans to showcase its new bubble jet printers and special software.

On the tour, Canon hopes that people all over the United States will be able to see what its products have to offer consumers.

The tour started June 5 in Los Angeles. Since then, Dobbins has logged 21,000 miles and has been across the United States, from one coast to the other.

Dobbins gets a great chance to see America, which is something that most recent college graduates only dream of.

"It's great to see the country," Dobbins said. "It is a different perspective when you drive through all these towns instead of flying.

Dobbins graduated from the University of Arkansas with a degree in computer information systems and quantitative analysis in May 1994. He But one thing's for sure — the van started doing computer work for a will continue to roll.

company where he maintained the automatic teller network between the company and a national credit union, but he wanted a change.

"I wanted to do something where I worked with people," Dobbins said.

This leg of the tour takes Dobbins and his van on a 7,000 mile journey covering 15 cities: Memphis, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Chicago, Philadelphia, New York, Hartford, Boston, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Portland, Sacramento and San Francisco. The tour ends Nov. 17 in Las Vegas.

Canon's new printers and software are being marketed to what Canon Computer Senior Field Sales Representative Scott Arnold calls the 'SoHome" crowd — small office and home use.

Canon outfitted the inside of the van with a small working office: a desk, a small PC, a scanner and one of its new printers. Dobbins drives the van all over the country so Canon can showcase its products to the media.

"We'll visit anyone — from a local network affiliate to a college radio station; from a business magazine to a crafts magazine," Dobbins said.

Canon attributes its wide market appeal to its new software that offers applications for just about everyone in the small business or home computer

After his brief stint in Utah, Dobbins is heading out to the West Coast. He doesn't know what he plans to do after this leg of the tour ends.
